The Monitoring Association Appoints New Co-Chair for its NextGen Committee

May 14, 2024, McLean, VA – The Monitoring Association (TMA) is pleased to announce the appointment of Amy Becht to the co-chairmanship of its NextGen Committee. In this important role, Becht joins seated Committee Co-Chair Jessica Lambert, AvantGuard Monitoring Centers, in leading the Committee. Becht is currently the director of Monitoring for Vivint Smart Home.

“Through programs like NextGen, newer professionals can gain valuable insights, industry-specific knowledge, and leadership skills that can accelerate their career growth. Personally, I have benefited greatly from the mentorship and best practices shared by experienced leaders during my 16 years in the industry and involvement with TMA,” stated Becht. In her new role, Becht aims to grow the offerings that are available for TMA’s up-and-coming leaders. “By providing a broader range of resources, TMA’s NextGen community can become a more valuable resource for all our members.”

TMA CEO Celia T. Besore commented, “Amy has been a valued TMA contributor for many years. She brings a wealth of industry knowledge and professional experience to this pivotal role. There is no doubt that our NextGen members will derive great benefit from her leadership and unique insights. We are grateful for her commitment to our young careerists.”

The NextGen group offers young professionals and those who are new to the security industry a community of peers with whom to connect and collaborate. Participants take part in social, networking, and educational events throughout the year. Some are limited to NextGen members, while others invite TMA leaders or key subject-matter experts of interest.
